TELS FULL OF PEOPLE.

Lake George, N.Y., Aug. 11 (Special).-The week has brought mellow, sunshiny days, occasional showers, and glorious moonlight nights to add pleasure to summer dwellers' lives. There was on Wednesday afternoon an extraordinary sight, consisting of a golden haze that enveloped the world hereabouts for several hours. The sky was clouded, foreboding a storm, but the atmosphere was filled with a strange yellow light, which gave one an uncanny feeling and an uncertainty as to what was coming next. But the storm passed over, and left Lake George as peaceful and calm as if its waters were

IN CAMP AT GETTYSBURG.

EIGHT THOUSAND PENNSYLVANIA STATE TROOPS ASSEMBLE ON HISTORIC GROUND.

Gettysburg, Penn., Aug. II (Special).-The streets of Gettysburg resound again with the trend of sol-diers, for there are more than $600 troops of the State militia encamped upon the heights about this

The White Buil from Burmah will remain for two weeks longer at Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum. It has proved a great attraction. In the curio halls there will be also Celett's boxing monkeys, Eugene Garrette's educated birds and performing dogs, White Eagle Bill and his band of Indian braves, the Dunbars, in acts on the trapeze; the Martin sisters and Professor Nestie, in feats of legerdemain. In the theatre will be heard the Western sisters, Arthur Barry, the Burts, in a comedy sketch, and Mazatti. Professor Hooker's living pictures remain. The museum has been entirely remodelled.

Our steam railroad to S'conset quit some time ago. That didn't go into a receiver's hands; it quietly and unostentations; tumbled off the bank and lies there. The tender has come to have a tough sort of look new, and crows sit in the cab and roost on the smokestack of the engine. In time I suppose it'll be taken into the Missouri Pacific system and made a part of that property if ever the manager of the latter happens this way on a sharking expedition.

But simple and primitive as our manners are, 1

EGG CANDLERS HAVE A STORMY MEETING The Egg Candlers' Benevolent Association handled the Independent Order of Egg Candlers without gloves at Walhalla Hall, No. 48 Orchard-st., last night. The former association was the ploneer egg candler order of America. It once contained the leading egg experts of all religions. Some time ago a split occurred. The Hebrews were cast off, and noisy discussion occurred.

Casper Statz, a member of the Benevolent Association, climbed the platform and said:

"Mr. Rottenburg, I defy you to point me out one man in this hall who can tell a watery eag from a fresh laid one. (Loud bisses) That's my sentiments, gentlemen, and what I am going to say is that you are a lot of lobsters."

Mr. Statz was pushed off the platform and a crowd of excited opponents gathered about him and Mr. Statz was pushed off the platform and a crowd of excited opponents gathered about him and threatened him with electment. The Henevolent faction took the discussion up and stormy words were heard in all parts of the hall. The meeting adjourned without effecting a union. It takes two years to learn the trade and a lifetime to become an expert. The best men can pass upon 40,000 eggs a day. The process of examining eggs is accomplished by holding them before a burning candle.

London, Aug. 11.-Messra. Weed and Bartlett, who are reported to have come to England to seek financial aid for the Nicaragua Canal Company, said, in an interview this evening:

"While the shareholders of the Nicaragua Canal States on any fair basis carry out the enterprise, they do not propose to be idle or to let the project collapse. If the United States will not carry out the enterprise, therefore, we shall not refusany fair proposal from another source. We shall only stipulate that until a large amount be paid dy supulate that until a large amount be paid e first claim in the enterprise shall be reserved to e l'nited States. If Congress delays action until aropean capital shall have been invested, it must t complain. It really makes little difference hence the money comes, inasmuch as the canal ast always be neutral and open to the world's commerce.

Both men were hopeful that they would be successful in their mission.

PREPARING TO RECEIVE SATOLLE.

Butler, N. J., Aug. II.—Great preparations are being made for the reception of Monsignor Satolli at the shrine of St. Anthony. The shrine is being decorated with potted flowers, and other arrange-ments for a great day are being made. The choir ments for a great day are being made. The choir of a Paterson church will attend to carry out the musical part of the programme. It is expected that several thousand people from all parts of the State and from New-York will be present. Many people have already arrived and will remain over until after the departure of the Archbishop.

A SOLDIER THROWN FROM A TRAIN. New-Haven, Conn., Aug. 11.-The tour of duty of the Connecticut National Guard, which began at Niantic to-day, came near opening with tragedy. While the special trains which conveyed the Waterbury contingent of the 2d Regiment was passing through this city Private David Cavanaugh, of Company G, detailed to assist the company quartermaster, was thrown out of the baggage car by one of his comrades and narrowly company quartermasses, the companies and narrowly escaped being killed. It seems that Cavanaugh and another member of his company, whose name he refuses to divuige, quarrelled before the company left Waterbury. On the way to this city the quarrel continued, and shortly after the train left this city they came to blows. As the train was passing the Grand-st crossing at a high rate of speed, Cavanaugh's assailant pushed him through the door of the baggage car. Cavanaugh struck heavily on his shoulders, and bounded along for several yards. He was picked up and conveyed to a neighboring store, and a physician was sent for. He was insensible, but revived shortly after Police Surgeon Park arrived. He had several scalp wounds, which were attended to, but seemed to have sustained no further injury. After resting about an hour he started for the railway station, but fainted. He revived again soon, and was allowed to board a train for Niantic, where he will join his company.

LOVERS-THOUGHTS ON SEWERS AND

When I last week wrote Nantucket down "a spinster of the sea" the phrase pleased me, and I thought, too, it would please my old skippers. But when in Sunday's Tribune I found it "sprinter of the sea," I said "Marry, come up!"-which is what they say to spinsters. I believe, not to sprint-

You would call that simply a missprint, I suppose and lay the bame on my handwriting. But how about the late Mr. Greeley's? Is it the same syrlaters who set him up that "set up" me in that ers.

Later on when I found "John Pincus" where I had written John R. Bacon I became more commu ricative and profine and rolled over on my back and said "Adzooks!" Not because of its being the because it's what all my old shippers say when anything goes wrong with them, when a bobstay fouls a Jackstay or the tom cat gets mixed up with the dog watch. I don't know why they say "Adzooks" under all extreme circumstances unless because it rhymes with flukes.

"Sprinter" wasn't so bad. I couldn't quite sethe meaning of it, but those who find columns fenced off as "funny" amusing and can see a grin in a gothle srch might. After much study conclude that a run on some fishing bank was hinted at. But to call John Bacon John Pincus, so far from being a joke, might result in something intensely serious to an extremely interesting family and so I've cut down my daily constitutionals to

But on second thought, I'm not sure that those who introduced and run electric lights and such things, spoiling the "quaint simple primitive habits called out of their names. Though truth to tell if ago. Correspondents still write and tourists talk of them, but that does not change the status. Beyond auk's egg, regardless of the fact that the bird became extinct some time ago and that the egg is a stuffed one. On landing here twelve years ago wanted $5 for it. That was simple enough, the distance being but five miles, and primitive enough. for it was his first price as well as his last one But my experience with out-of-the-way places geneye and the simplicity on the part of strangers over gave as his deliberate opinion that it was in habited principally by men and women was not far out of the way. In the Fill Islands, however, one is eaten as well as skinned-"skun" is what we say here-which proves that there's some difference in islands and explains my preference for Nan-doubt if the most plausible manipulator of the con-solidated stock could unload any of the stuff on us. We old skippers know a hand-organ from a rip saw when the wind's southerly, and an eel from a clam let it blow wheresoever it listeth. And if any think that he could twist one of us between himself and an exploding bomb, twist he never so well and wisely, he is mistaken. Yet we're easy-going and good-natured in the

Who that is really sensible and has no interest at improvements." all in the matter, wants them. Yet some people howl for them. Here are Harold Williams and Joe and St Freeman and William Hosler and Allen Coffin sitting on the curbstone at sewers. What do they, or-what is more to the point-what do we want of sewers? Our fathers and other forbears all lived and died here quietly and easily enough. Why aren't strangers satisfied to come here and die without making such a fuss about it? Let 'em put that in their sewer pipe and smoke it. If common English law holds every man's house to be his castle how about his cesspool? Sewers here in Nantucket, quotha: I'll none of it or of them. Sooner let me die in the last ditch than incur the curse pronounced on him who removeth an ancient landmark. The Nantucket skipper who, when lost in a fog, dropped his deepsmelling of it announced confidently that he was over old Marm Hackett's garden-where would be have been if Nantucket soil had not had a quaint, primitive savor of its own? Talk of soundings; what is sound for a guide as compared to smell And if I couldn't count nineteen distinct ones when the tide is low at the head of Captain Swain's wharf-which Captain Killen and the harbor commissioners wont let him and me fill in-I'd be lost! "While the shareholders of the Nicaragua Canal And now we have "souvenir spoons" of the island. Company are patriotic and willing to let the United For Fuvenirs why not long-handled shove's? In my time we had no need of souvenirs when the spoon business was on. Ah, those dear old wharves,

Each was a long lovers' lane-a lane that had no turning. And before your Mr. Pincus turned on his electric search-lights, when there was no light but the melow one of the moon, the youth and maiden appreciated it without recognizing the author until one came almost to consider and sometimes claim it as his own. In the faint light then even the sharp-eyed old skipper with the most powerful ship's glass from the highest "Captain's Walk" couldn't tell a fellow on the wharf from of the "splies," a girl from a derrick. Couldn't tell whether it was a Swain or a Hussy, a Macy, a Coffin, or a Starbuck. A protecting arm thrown around an imperilled maiden to keep her from slipping over the edge of the wharf showed no more n the kindly moonlight than would one of Saturn's bands on a background of dark blue flannel. Now, in the flerce giare of Mr. Pincus's electric light, it would show and shine like a good deed in a naughty and nautical world, like an arm of the sea turned loose and meandering round some narrow waste. Little wonder that our maidens wall TO THE MOON.

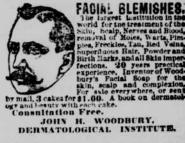

Oh, moon this is rough—
Wasn't your light enough?
By it often we thought
Folks saw more than they ought,
But whate'er they might think
You knew when to wink:
And when two people waked
Together and talked—
Not obtrustively loud,
And three were a small cloud,
Behind it you'd gide
Discreetly, and hide.
And, moon, we all knew
Things were quite safe with you,
That howe'er you might peep
Still secrets you'd keep,
And what lovers might say
Ne'er disclose to the day.
But this co.d-blooded light is so dreadfully bright,
Outshining the sun,
Showing more than is done,
With its radiance medicating blue. Is so dreadfully bright,
Outshining the sun,
Showing more than is done,
With its radiance new
Love's young dream dyeing blue,
Making all seem askew;
And lending no veli
When one whispers the tale
From the skles that was told
When the heavens unrolled;
That in Eden was sung
When its morning was young—
By birds on the trees
Before men on their knees
Came maldens to tense—
Now as well our desire
Might be told from some spire
By the horrid Town Crier,
And maldens no more
Sit and wait on the shore.
Yes, moon, it is true
That we better liked you;
You were quite quantum suff,
Your light was enough
And we can but feel gruff.
For, ch, moon, this is rough.

I began painting the house outside on the morning of that day and didn't about the tidal wave till afternoon, I said "Just my luck." However, none on the island got into their bathing suits and we're all on deck yet. That the tidal wave would have been an unmixed evil is not sure, for we had the cellar full of plumbers and a lot of painters swarming on ladders outside; it would have been rather an effectual way of getting rid of them. And as those who oppose sewerage claim that cesspools are equal to any emergency, perhaps my new one would have disposed of the tidal wave. But don't think that I'm dissatisfied—I don't mean because no tidal wave swept away my plumbers and painters, but with the abounding sewerage. At this advanced period of life I do not purpose to spend the rest of it fighting windmills-even the old and storied one on the hill, of which you may have seen an occasional photograph, if not the original. And using the water supply of the town and not a well, I can stand cesspools if my neighbors who take their water from wells alongside of which my cesspool stands can. And perhaps in view of the ill-feeling which a ventilation of the subject always causes in this here town, it may be well to stop right here and let well enough alone! Undoubtedly I am getting old and cranky; for I don't enjoy unpleasant smells nearly so much as Comfort and cleanliness now mean n to me than they did when I was a boy and de-

CHILIAN NITRATES AS A PLANT FOOD.

THE MISSION OF JULIO M. FOSTER AND THE GOOD RESULTS POSSIBLE FROM IT.

Milford, Penn., Aug. 11 (Special).-To some friends who called on him while he was here. Erastus Wiman said that the mission on behalf of the Chilian Government by his friend and host, Julio M. Foster, had far greater significance to the American people than is usually included in the achievements of ambassadors. The purpose of the mission was to introduce into universal use, if possible, the Chilian nitrates as a plant food. The result of this would be that instead of two blades of grass, four would grow where only one now grows, and that from the flow-ers in the window that the wife of the poorest man nourishes with loving care up through the products of the garden and the orchard, to the great crops of tobacco, corn and cotton, the power of production of tobacco, corn and cotton, the power of production could be equally augmented.

Mr. Wiman said that one of the unique figures in the world to-day was Colonel North, the "nitrate king" of Great Britain, but the American public had not yet realized that his fabulous fortune had resulted from the aimost universal adoption of ni-trates as a plant food by the British people, the had not yet realized that his tabulous rortune had resulted from the almost universal adoption of nitrates as a plant food by the British people, the extent of which might be shown by the importation of over 1,60,600 tons annually, while in the United States the quantity brought in had not amounted to more than one-tenth of that. Yet the rapidity of exhaustion of arable soils in the United States was proportionately greater than in Great Britain, while the condition of the American farmer, planter and gardener demanded that every possible add to production should be made available. But more than this was the fact that from the cities, owing to want of employment and the probable continuance of hard times, great numbers must resort to the land in order to sustain themselves, and if by the last of a stimulant such as nitrate afforded the exhausted and idle acreage that in every locality now abounded could be made to yield largely of food, the impending revolution in economic conditions would be mastened and completed without serious disaster.

The experience in Detroit illustrates this point, where by municipal effort large acreage had been put into potatoes as a provision to keep the poor from starvation next winter. If by individual effort and the application of nitrates three or four bushels of potatoes could be assured where one is now possible the result would be most satisfactory. After lifty years spent in Chill. Mr. Wiman continued, Mr. Foster has been accredited by the Government of the country of his adoption to the Government of the and of his birth, with the duty of introducing this most valuable product, and it is impossible to overestimate the interest and importance of the work he had in hand. The disappearance of the work he had in hand. The disappearance of the guano beds in Peru, from which all the world had drawn, was by a bounteous Providence supplemented in the development of the nitrate deposition the South American Pacific coast; and these, in conjunction with the timely discovery of phosph
